Options for Men with Heavy Necks?

Many men have a “turkey gobbler” neck, referring to significant excess skin under the chin along the front of the neck. There are several options to treat this in male patients. Men now make up about 25% of our patient population.

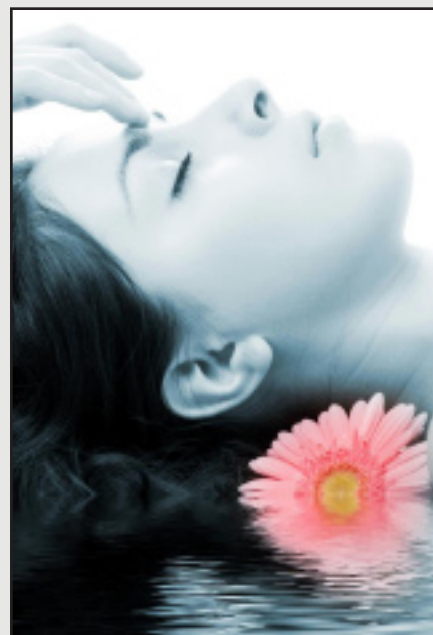

An endoscopic face and neck lift is performed in a unique way for men, with special attention to incision placement, and beard skin. This procedure helps to refine the neck, and tighten the jowls, with about a two week downtime. A direct neck lift with Z-plasty is an alternative procedure, specifically designed to target the looseness along the front of the neck, without addressing the jowls. This is a shorter procedure which provides long term treatment of the “turkey gobbler” that bothers most men. For those younger men with early signs of fullness under the neck, liposuction may be enough to remove excess skin and allow the skin to tighten. A consultation with one of our two Facial Plastic Surgeons, Dr. Maloney or Dr. Agarwal, would help you decide which procedure is ideal to tighten your neck.

Ultrasonic Liposuction for Body Contouring

Liposuction is the surgical removal of fat cells through small incisions. Liposuction is not an alternative to weight reduction, but can be very effective in removing fat from areas that do not respond to diet and exercise, to sculpt the body into a slimmer profile. One of the most recent advances is the addition of ultrasonic energy, which melts the fat tissue prior to removal, thus limiting bruising and discomfort. Suction-assisted lipectomy is usually performed under anesthesia in a fully accredited outpatient surgical facility.

Please call to set up an hour long consultation with Dr. Boemi that covers your goals, any questions you have concerning surgery, and computer imaging.
